Gunderson Dettmer represented Linq in its $90 million Series B financing led by Andreessen Horowitz. The round also included participation from TQ Ventures, Mucker Capital, Abstract, Anthos, and Left Lane Capital.

Linq is a messaging infrastructure that gives developers APIs to connect AI agents to customers over chat, handling delivery, identity, and scale across channels including Apple Messages for Business, RCS, and WhatsApp. The new capital will be used to continue investing in messaging, expand its software and hardware infrastructure, and build the partnerships that make more powerful agents accessible to everyone.

“We believe agents should be as easy to reach as a friend, and capable enough to finish the job,” said Linq CEO Elliott Potter, in a LinkedIn post announcing the transaction. “You should be able to text or call an agent and have it get real work done.”

The Gunderson deal team was led by Ibrahim Elshamy and included Allen Amin and Alyssa Tamboura.
