Voyage Labs Raises $12 Million Seed

Gunderson Dettmer represented Voyage Labs in its $12 million seed financing. The round was led by Kleiner Perkins, with participation from SignalFire, SV Angel, and several prominent angel investors.

Voyage Labs builds AI that helps people experience more of the world. Its first product, Atlas, is a personal AI agent that learns how you travel, works around the clock, and handles a trip from the first idea to the ride home. The company will use the funds to expand supplier partnerships across flights, stays, dining, and experiences, and to grow its engineering team as it opens the private beta for Atlas through a waitlist.

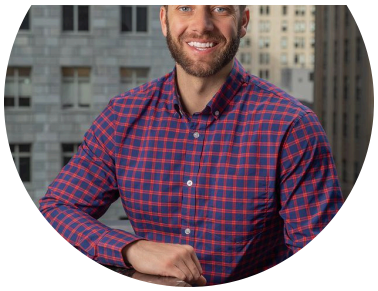

“Exploring the world is one of the biggest parts of our lives,” said Manik Gupta, co-founder and CEO of Voyage Labs, in the announcement of the transaction. “Atlas is there for every step, from discovering and planning to enjoying the moment, whether that’s a Friday dinner or a trip far away. We believe everyone should have a specialized personal agent that opens up more of the world to them, and with this funding, we’re building it.”

The Gunderson deal team was led by Nic Markman and included Matt Fagan and William Plata-Cortez.
